In a known switching system of the above-mentioned type, an automatic switch mechanism has at least one mechanical switch, with at least one actuating element, which can be switched by way of a piston-type displacement motion, and at least one actuating element, which can be switched by way of a diaphragm-type displacement motion. This mechanical switch is connected to a control unit, which has a control signal distributor. The control unit can deliver control signals to at least one electric operating device, with a motor vehicle drive system being a preferred application. EP 0 774 476 A1 shows a control mechanism, which is designed in the same way. It has a control signal distributor, which is designed for supplying control signals to the drive system of a vehicle, and a mechanical switch, which is connected to the control signal distributor. In the mechanical switch, at least one actuating element, which is designed as a mechanical member, can be switched with a corresponding actuating element, which is designed as an electric member. In the case of these known automatic switching systems, the mechanical switch is normally arranged directly on the actual drive system, and the switch elements of the switch are embodied as electromechanical components. A disadvantage of the known automatic switching systems is the fact that the switching positions of the switch cannot be recognized during operation. In the case of the control mechanism, the control signal distributor supplies control signals that are delivered to the drive system, and the automatic switching system is controlled and/or regulated via the control signals. In particular, it is not possible to check the switching positions of the switch elements. It is therefore an object of the present invention to provide an automatic switching system for operating an object, which does not have the above-mentioned disadvantages. In accordance with the invention, this object is achieved by an automatic switching system for operating an object, in which case the switching system has an electric switching element, the switch element having at least one actuating element, and a control unit, which has a control signal distributor, which is connected to the switching element, the control unit being operable by way of the control signals, and the control signal distributor being connected to
