Garmin's new handheld GPS, the GPSMAP 411, is supposed to be a streamlined version of its others. Other than that, they're pretty much the same. You get a real GPS unit, with a 3.5-inch a Other than that, they're pretty much the same. You get a real GPS unit, with a 3.5-inch color touchscreen, Bluetooth, and Wi-Fi. You can upload various types of data to Garmin's servers (like tracks, stats, and even photos), and it provides a feature called Elevate, which enables some pretty neat tracking software. However, the GPS map comes preloaded with the US, and this means I could never use it for something like tracking or counting my runs. But, it does a pretty good job as a device for all other activities. It gets the job done. But, the real review is on the software that comes with the GPS. It doesn't look any different from the previous software, but it is really easy to use. The features are there, and they all work pretty well. In fact, if you're just looking for a casual tracker, this is one of the best options available right now. You get a pretty basic GPS feature that will track where you're going, and that will do the rest of it for you. If you want a bit more, you can easily upgrade to the higher-end 810, 815, or 920 models. The one thing you don't get, is the Elevate or the LiveTrack feature. But, if you just want to log how far you run or bike, a good program like Strava can easily do that. Other than that, it's a pretty good package, and you'll get over $100 worth of features for less than $200. So, it's a good value. The Windows Phone 7 is meant to be an upgrade from the older Windows Mobile, with a bit more. What that means is, in this update, Windows Phone 7 moves to a silver-ish color, and it's supposed to get some games and other stuff. The phone uses a 5.8-inch touchscreen a69d392a70

Read MoreAbout 1,000 people attended the funeral of the lynching victim, Angelo Smith, at the Church of God in Christ in Aibonito, Puerto Rico. The police and Puerto Rico's Judicial Police (PJP) tried to charge the family members with murder, the Associated Press reported. They said the victim had been shot in the face and chest and found by police with a 23-year-old woman who had been allegedly raped by two men while her sister and another relative watched. The sister, who was 11 at the time, identified the suspects but later recanted. A photo of the victim, seen at the start of the video, shows him lying in a hospital bed, as though dead, with a gunshot wound to the head, a bloody shirt and massive cuts on his neck and shoulders. The case will be reviewed by a grand jury. In the video, a throng of about 100 people is heard chanting "No justice, no peace!" The U.S. territory of nearly 3.5 million people has the third-highest murder rate in the world, with around 4,000 killings in 2017, according to the Pew Research Center. The Associated Press contributed to this report.I must have been about 12 years old when I first tried a can of pop. That was it – I was hooked. My family drank pop. As a child, all I knew of the continent that contained my birthplace was that it was where my father had grown up. I knew little else beyond what I experienced every day: my paternal grandparents fighting, my mother singing, my father doing push-ups, breaking down in tears in the laundry room, making money to pay a hospital bill, the wrath of my mother's father, and my older sister making my younger sister and me do the dishes or go to bed. It was a loving family. But there was something about the place, the people, the culture, that seemed to pull at me. It was that something that got me so hooked on pop. Years later I met a French artist who lived in Paris. I had heard stories about the violence, the misogyny, the cold and harsh Parisian life, but he was always ready to have a laugh and chatted at the drop of a hat. I met him through the internet where he was creating beautiful art full of humor. At one point when he asked if I liked his art I told him no.
